G. M. Allison went to Nashville Sunday afternoon on business.

A party of some twenty people from here started for Raven Rock on Meadow Creek Sunday and returned late in the afternoon rubbing their shins. It seems the rock was some few miles nearer town than they expected and the "wild goose" course they took led them to a safe distance beyond their goal. Some reached the coveted spot, worn and weary, their dinner in the dim distance. Others failed to even get a glimpse of the historic stone, on account of being so distantly related to Davy Crockett, but all returned with a splendid appetite. Wild grass is a good appetizer.
